

Silas Moves Forward From Kentucky And Onward To Berlin

(Harrisburg, N.C. 7/21/09) Bryan Silas went to Kentucky Speedway looking for redemption after a few weeks of bad luck. Bryan was well on his way to more than redemption, a chance at his first win in the ARCA RE/MAX Series.

Bryan had a good car in the first practice session and jumped up to sixth on the charts in the second session. When qualifying rolled around Bryan was first out and laid down a good lap, he knew that his qualifying position wouldn't reflect the night he would have and he was right.

Silas moved right up through the field when the green flag dropped. By lap two he had moved into ninth place. Silas pitted early on lap twenty five and the team decided to take the gamble on fuel mileage. It would be close but a chance the team had to take. By the sixth caution Bryan was in third place gaining on the leaders every lap. Bryan drove an amazing race. With the car hooked up, here was his chance at victory. Fate would intervene on lap ninety eight when Bryan's number 11 machine ran out of fuel. Silas made it back to the pits to get enough fuel to finish the race but he would end up with the twenty second finishing position.

This weekend Bryan heads to Berlin looking to get what is rightfully his, victory. Berlin Raceway in Marne, Michigan has always been a place where Bryan Silas has shown his racing ability. In the 2008 race at Berlin, Silas finished thirteenth, which clearly did not reflect the race that Bryan ran.

This year Bryan heads to Berlin with a fresh outlook and the confidence in himself and his team. Bryan is now sitting sixth in championship standings after last weekend's race at Kentucky Speedway. "I am really excited about going back to Berlin, it's where I had my ARCA RE/MAX Series debut and it's a great memory," said Silas.
